Gentlemen:

Webster's "Effective English Expression" is a very sensible book. I am especially pleased that some one has at last recognized the reciprocity of speaking and writing. The treatment of the sentence (by ear and eye training) is particularly good.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT W. GAY

A Minimum Course in Rhetoric

(Just Published)

By HENRY C. EDGAR

Instructor of English, Hill School, Pottstown, Pa.

A rhetoric for upper high school grades that has grown out of the resultful classroom experience of the author. It is built on a definite, structural plan.

The actual course is held to the minimum and treated in full. Three-quarters of the volume is devoted to appendixes covering what is difficult, special, minute or miscellaneous, such as additional rhetorical matter, punctuation, spelling, suggested lesson assignments, a glossary of common violations of pure English, "words often confused," a review of grammar, exercises, etc.

Really sufficient exercise material is included, covering the whole ground. There are eighty groups and each exercise is long enough for separate, individual assignment, for home work, class practice, advanced work and reviews.

The unusual resources of the volume and the practical appendix material are features especially noteworthy.

Modern Short Stories

By FREDERICK HOUK LAW

Stuyvesant High School, New York City

Twenty-two modern short stories that will awaken living interests, stimulate the imagination, and develop friendly intimacy with humanity. The unusually large number of stories enables the student to gain a knowledge of types, of ways of construction and of style. Introductory material, biographies, explanations and notes, and the stories themselves, are purely for the high school student. The authors represented are

Joel Chandler Harris
Lafcadio Hearn
Count Leo Tolstoi
Richard Harding Davis
